Notes

At the start of the war, the French Army wore a khaki green uniform and the distinctive Adrian helmet. After the fall of France, British equipment and uniforms were substituted to overcome the lack of French uniforms.

The Free French forces in the mid war period was equipped with many British items of clothing. French "Adrian" helmets were worn if available. The French Foreign Legion wore the distinctive white kepi hat with a black brim.

From circa 1943 onwards, American uniforms began to dominate and by 1944, the Free French looked virtually identical to American infantry.

Books

General

Andrew Mollo: The Armed Forces of World War 2 (Little, Brown and Company)

This book is a very useful overview of uniforms and insignia. There are 250 colour drawings and 100 photographs which cover every nation involved in WW2. The original 1981 version is a large format book. There is an A5 reprint that does not include the Eastern front.

Chris McNab: 20th Century Military Uniforms: 300 Uniforms from Around the World (Grange Books PLC)

This book is similar in style to Andrew Mollo's book and has many of the same illustrations.

Osprey books are also very good but there are several which touch the subject, so it is difficult to recommend one item.

Free French Africa is the political entity which collectively represents the colonial territories of France on African soil which rallied to Free France formed by General de Gaulle during the Second World War in order to continue the struggle against Nazi Germany and the Axis forces. It provided a political and territorial base for Free France and strengthened General de Gaulle's international position. It made a major contribution to the war effort by financing the French Resistance, by the French North Africa

French North Africa was a collection of territories owned by France in the region of North Africa, consisting of present-day Morocco, Algeria, and Tunisia. The formation of French North Africa began with the invasion of Algeria in 1830, and by 1912 the three countries were protectorates of France, with Morocco and Tunisia being ruled by local monarchs loyal to France and Algeria being governed as a French colony. French North Africa was a minor battleground of World War II, being easily overwhelmed in
